At freezing point the night hands over to the day

Reflecting on the world around us

This worksheet was created by artist Caroline Hall to inspire you to explore your own creativity during these extraordinary times. It is for children and adults to share together.

*Walk the waves of the fields where mud, hard frozen, is friendly to the boot,
By the lanes where each ivy leaf is framed
And the rainbow coalesces in the white that brings to life the achromatic winter hedges.*

These are a few lines from Jeremy Harwood's poem 'Freezing Point'. Use a dictionary to look up any tricky words for meanings and think about images which come to mind. Be creative and not afraid to play with colour and shapes.

1) Using this first as inspiration, draw and colour your world inside the winter globe on the next page. Print out the globe and have fun decorating your landscape. If you have some chalk, go and draw a very large circle on your patio stones (ask an adult first) and add figures, animals into your worlds. Large paper will do the job too!

2) On page three, I have shown my first sketch lines of my painting. You are welcome to print this out too and add your creative ideas to this landscape, perhaps for a future painting?

3) We linked poetry with the visual arts in this project, so why not have a go and write your own poem, maybe looking at the world around us at the moment. A stop - start moment which you may want to write down how you feel at the moment. Things you miss and what you are enjoying?

This page is for you to doodle, write song lyrics or poetry which reflects your thoughts on your personal landscape today! A starting place for a future painting or diary entry where you can express your feelings. Remember: This Day Is For You.

We'd love you to share photos of your artwork by email to caroline1968hall@googlemail.com. I will share a selection of those I receive.

By sending it to me you are giving your permission for it to be shared on my website/social media, the project Facebook page and Severn Arts website/social media.
